Teens visit all 272 London Underground stations in record time

Published: July 8, 2024 at 12:58 PM

Ben Hooper

July 8 (UPI) -- A group of eight British teenagers took their enthusiasm for public transportation to the extreme and broke a Guinness World Record by riding the London Underground.

The teenagers, ages 16-17, visited all 272 London Underground stations with a time of 18 hours, 8 minutes and 13 seconds.

The group, who call themselves the The Amersham Ambushers, were required to visit every London Underground stop using only public transportation.

They had attempted what they called "The London Tube Challenge" twice before, but only found success on their third try.

"We wanted to complete this record for two reasons," team member Arthur Phillips told Guinness World Records. "It was a fun puzzle planning the route as some of us are quite mathematically inclined, and additionally it allowed us to explore parts of London that we hadn't ever had reason to go to before."

Phillips said the previous record-holder was good-humored about losing their title and will soon be meeting The Amersham Ambushers for lunch.

DEFINITION

A logline, also known as an elevator pitch, is a one sentence description of your book meant to hook someone's interest as concisely and quickly as possible, whether that someone would be a reader, an agent, or a publisher.
